

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

There are described processes for the separation of components from a fermentation product or other biomass product. The fluid mixture is passed through a separation column having at least one capture element having flow channels of about 50 μ or greater and which includes chemically active capture material capable of capturing a desired component from the mixture. The separation column may include a plurality of the chemically active capture elements.